Woman Visiting in Barre Tells Interesting Story.

One of the passengers who raced into port on the White Star liner Canopic was Mrs. E. Lange, who arrived in the city from Boston yesterday to visit her sister, Mrs. Edward Dunghi, whose husband is a member of the firm of Ossola & Dunghi, granite manufacturers. Mrs. Lange is able to join with the 1,062 other passengers in telling stories of the suffering occasioned by the European strife and she bore her share of the worry while the great boat, shrouded as all steamships are nowadays, picked its way from Gibraltar across the Atlantic under forced draught and entered the port of Boston Sunday, two days ahead of time. At her sister's home, 531 North Main street, Mrs. Lange was still recovering from the excitement of the voyage when a reporter got her story.

"We left Genoa Aug. 1 with 74 passengers," Mrs. Lange began, "and sailed from Naples three days later with 989 additional, who had engaged berths at the last minute. The passengers were in fear of capture from the moment they left the Italian port, as there were reports of the activities of German cruisers in the vicinity, and one of the passengers, sailing on another vessel a few days before, had been brought to a coast town as a prisoner on a cruiser of the enemy. For a few hundred miles after leaving Gibraltar, the Canopic was convoyed by a British cruiser. The captain, J. B. Kelk, was warned to keep away from the Azores, and in following these instructions a detour of 300 miles was made around the islands. Once the operator heard a wireless message from one of the islands to a German cruiser asking for the whereabouts of the British steamer."

In her own way, Mrs. Lange tells of the precautions taken to avoid discovery. From the day Gibraltar was passed, the sides of the ship were covered with canvas to keep the light fit by night. Such a precaution was hardly necessary, however, for the electric bulbs in all the outer staterooms were removed to prevent the passengers from showing a light at any time. The captain, it was reported, feared a sympathizer of the enemy might be aboard and show a light which could be seen from a distance, were it not for the side of the canvas. Wireless reports were received daily giving the positions of the German cruisers. The passengers were not advised of the war developments until three days before reaching port, and consequently much uncertainty resulted. On the Wednesday night before the arrival in Boston, the passengers held a meeting to consider the war situation and to ask the United States government to relieve Americans abroad. A letter with many signatures was forwarded to President Wilson later.

In sharp contrast to the pecuniary condition in which many of the passengers found themselves, Mrs. Lange was well supplied with funds and entered upon the voyage with the knowledge that she might have trouble in reaching America. She was anxious to be with her sister, however, and now that she is here she plans to stay, at least until the war is ended.

EXCITEMENT AT CHELSEA.

Over Appearance of Orlo J. MacNabb, Fugitive from State Prison.

Chelsea, Aug. 20.—Great excitement has prevailed here since last Friday, arising from the fact that notice was given the officials here on that day that Orlo J. MacNabb, who had been a resident here for the past six years and who was early in July last committed to the state prison at Windsor to serve a sentence of from three to five years for obtaining money under false pretenses had on that day made his escape from the prison.

On Saturday evening officials from the prison arrived in town and after being closeted with the local officers for a short time proceeded to the residence of Eugene H. Kennedy in the "upper village," where they polled that end of the town during the remainder of the night, expecting from information which came to them concerning MacNabb's plans that he would as soon as possible after his escape make his way to Mr. Kennedy's with the hope that he might get aid in the way of food, clothing or money, since he had worked for Mr. Kennedy a greater part of the time during his residence in town. Nothing was seen of him by the officers during the night and on Sunday they made preparations for a larger force to assist them Sunday night and as darkness gathered they proceeded to the north end of the town again and went straight to Mr. Kennedy and made known their plans which resulted from the information they had received. Mr. Kennedy gave them the liberties of his house and all his buildings and assured them that he would like to have the fugitive captured and returned to the prison where he belonged.

Monday morning dawned but MacNabb had not shown up during the night, and the officers believing that their information may have been a blind, left for Windsor. On Tuesday noon Sheriff E. W. Kent, who was in town to attend the special session of court on that day, "got wind" of the fact that MacNabb's cap was found near Kennedy's buildings early Tuesday morning. With this information he organized a posse of 20 officers and men and proceeded to the "north end" and upon their arrival Mr. Kennedy's house barn, and two mills were immediately surrounded and a thorough search was begun, to which Mr. Kennedy's house, barn, and two mills inquired concerning MacNabb's cap he told the officers that MacNabb arrived at his house about 10 o'clock Monday evening and rapped on his bedroom window and asked him to come to the back door, to which call Mr. Kennedy responded. He stated to the officers that MacNabb asked for his clothes which were there, and for money, and that both requests were denied him and said further that he advised MacNabb to give himself up and after laboring with him for some time, he said, the fugitive agreed to do it and asked him if he wouldn't give him a hat, as he was bare-headed and to this request Mr. Kennedy yielded and gave him an old cap and "Mac" disappeared in the darkness headed for Windsor as Mr. Kennedy puts it, as he said he did not want to give himself up to the local officers.

Tuesday evening other officers arrived and were working on the case and the whole community is waiting with much interest and anxiety the moment when they shall "hear something dead."

In this total are the 20 cars which participated in the Board of Trade ride to Burlington. On another morning recently, a passenger counted 98 cars in the six miles spanned by the traction road.

The police are making preparations to handle the circus crowd Saturday, when Robinson Bros.' shows pitch their tents at the Granite City driving park. From St. Albans the chief received a despatch from the circus people to-day, suggesting that an extra cordon of officers be organized in anticipation of the show's arrival. To-morrow Robinson Bros. perform in Burlington and will arrive in Barre over the Central Vermont railroad early Saturday morning.
